Description – Companies are faced with more change, disruptors, and market competition. In general, the workforce of today needs complex skills to survive and thrive, but many employees lack the needed skills. Because critical skills are missing, organizations may not be able to grow, compete, or prepare for the future of work.

Kristen Fyfe-Mills; ATD National Associate Director of Communications and Brand is responsible for sharing ATD's story with diverse audiences around the world. She will share findings from the 2019 ATD National Skills Gap survey consisting of more than 300+ US based talent development professionals—team leaders, managers, directors, leaders, and executives. There will also be ample time for Q & A with our guest from the national ATD office.

BIO – Kristen oversees ATD's internal and external communications efforts and public policy initiatives, including the association's work on skills gap and talent development trends. She manages the association's professional recognition programs and is the executive producer for ATD-TV. Kristen is a published author, coach, and speaker with diverse experience in broadcast journalism, and corporate, and nonprofit communications.
